

Passion for the Process

No Money = No Issue

You Can't Make Someone Talk to You

Addressing the Here and Now

Paradox of Recognition

Publish in Order to Lose Your SELF

Minority Within a Minority Within a Minority

CARE

CARE

CARE

CARE

LOVE&HATE

Mutual Dependency = Independence

Distribution as Recognition

Bird

Octopus

Dog

Cockroach

Dancing Spider

Spinning Wheel

Disobedience

Precariousness

ERROR

Lost in Translation

What does your practice transmit
from the past to the present?

If your practice
was a vehicle,
what would it
look like?
Why?

Think of a time
when you used
your intuition
to transform
a high risk situation into a favorable one.

What is your role in the long life
of a work published by a collective?

How do you determine the limits of what you can do
and make in a week,
month, year?

What about sharing your work publicly
do you think runs smoothly, and which parts create friction?

Where in your creative work do you notice competitiveness?

Who is more important, your ego or your audience?

Consider the types of translation you need to make your project accessible to its intended
audience.

Are they culturally, regionally, and/or language specific?

If your practice was a bench, what kind of bench would it be?

How would you find your place on it?

How do you approach accountability within your community?

Can you practice more trust with your collaborators?

What holds you back from trying?

What are the moments when you feel you are making progress in your process?

If your practice
was a simple tool (e.g., a hammer,
a pair of scissors),
what tool
would it be?

Why?

Think of a time you experienced a shift into a clear power
balance in a group.

How did people in that group relate to each other?

What shared values kept
the group together?

Think of a time
when you felt joy in your work.

Write a letter about that experience
and keep it
at hand.

Find a shadow librarian
and thank them for their work.

Take your current project out for coffee.

Ask what it needs,
listen generously,
and jot down
its wish list.

Make a list of your never finished projects and place it on a visible wall.

Involve people in your work by asking them what they would like to experience from it.

Stuck?

Try to apply a piece of advice you received but never considered or reach out to someone new.

Write a message
to someone you admire.

Tell them what you value in their work.

Start a journal
to record any time you find a shared language that resolves a difficulty.

Utilize it as your treasure trove of solutions.

Write an unexpected thank-you note
to a current or past collaborator.

Share two truths
about your work
style and one wish for a current project's future.

Invite people to contribute to a shared space of ideas, quotes and references (e.g., a meme, song, book, film) that may be applicable for resolving collective tensions.

Choose something from your archive that represents endurance and resilience for you.

Share the importance of this example with your friends and colleagues.

Exchange with a friend or colleague an example of a mistake you made.

Share the story in a non-judgmental way.

Return to an idea you had abandoned with fresh eyes; find it a home in a new project.

Be vulnerable.

Use only unfamiliar mediums to express your concept.

Reflect on the roadblocks that repeat in your work and name
them for future
reference.

Break the cycle!